MARRIAGE OF THE WYSES.

SHERIFF CLEVELAND OF BUFFALO SENT CONGRATULATIONS.

Then Went Out to Flud Haby Bissell not Take a Brink-The Bride Was Mrs. E. C. Hall According to the Marriage Notier, But Wyse Save She Was Nattle Rich-Testimony All In in Wyse's Suit to Get Back His Estate-His Wife Deates His Befamatory Story of Her Past,

Mrs. Marie S. Wyse, who is being sued by her husband, William Sumner Wyse, in the Superior Court for $170,000 worth of property that he says he conveyed to her while he was so completely under her influence that he had no will of his own, was on the witness stand nearly all day yesterday. Mrs. Wyse sailed along rapidly on her direct examination in the forencen. Notwithstanding the statement of Mr. Wyse on the witness stand that he had with his wife first in Clemmie Dow's house of Ill fame in West Twenty-sixth street, her lawyer questioned her chiefly on the incidents of her career subsequent to her marriage in 1873, and glided over her previous history in half a dozen questions. Mrs. Wyse talked in a low, soft voice, and although she avoided looking at ony one in the court room, even at her lawyer, she gave no evidence of being ill at case.

Q.—Were you living with your husband when you met Mr. Wyse? A.—I was.
Q.—When did your first husband die? A.—In you?"

"E-7, I've heard that name," said Mrs. Wyse.

"Where?" asked Mr. Lamb.

"E-7-T, Mr. Wyse told me," she said, "that he had once kept a woman of that name, and that I resembled her so much that he was afraid his friends might take me for her."

"Do you recall an Emma Brown who lived on West Twenty-seventh street?"

Mrs. Wyse colored and replied.

"Brown, Brown, that is a very familiar name. I knew a Mrs. Emerson Brown once, and I may have known other women of that name."

husband all of his property that she brought suit for asparation. Mrs. Wyse said, however, that she brought the suit because "Billy" had called on her at her fiat and threatened, as she supposed, to shoot her because she refused to give him $100. After the recess Mr. Lamb began by asking:

Q.—Where did you first meet your husband?
A.—My first husband introduced him to me at our apartments in Brooking.
Q.—You are sure of that? A.—Yes.
Q.—Did you state in an affidavit in 1884 that you first meet Mr. Wyse at a friend's house?
Mrs. Wyse stumbled a bit in answering this question. She said that she had met Mr. Wyse friend was Jennie Warner, who lived at 16 West Twenty-third street.

"But before i met him there," she said, "my husband had introduced him to me in our own apariments."

Q.—Were you living with your husband when

Q.—Do you know the house in Twenty-sixth street that has been referred to as the place where you first met Mr. Wyse? A.—I do not.

When Mrs. Wyse faced the cross-examination which was very mild, her manner changed. She hesitated, bit her lips, looked up at the ceiling, and frequently repeated the lawyer's question, as if to gain time. She said that her lirst husband introduced her to Wyse in their Brooklyn home, whose address she had forgotten. She had separated from her first husband a year before he died. She could not remember positively just where she had lived after her separation from her first husband and until she met Mr. Wyse. She had spent a week or two with this friend or that and had visited at various places, and had lived with a dressmaker on Broadway whose destitute circumstances had aroused her pity. She denied positively that she had occupied rooms with Mr. Wyse in the apartments of this dressmaker. She also denied that she had ever been an inmate of Clemmie Dow's house. Mr. Wyse's lawyer did not press her closely on these points, and she seemed to be surprised when Mr. Lamb told her that she might leave the chair. sitated, bit her lips, looked up at the ceiling

I met him in Brooklyn. He was introduced to me by my husband.

Mrs. Wyse said that her first husband died in 1871, and after his death she lived for a part of the time in Buffalo with a cousin of hers. While there Wyse visited her frequently.

"Now. Mrs. Wyse," said Mr. Hinsdale. "I have got to ask you these questions." Mrs. Wyse knew what was coming, and she straightened up in her clair and looked toward the ceiling.

"Mr. Wyse has said that you were once an inmate of a disorderly house. Is that true or false?" it is utterly false."

"Mr. Wyse has said that you were once an inmate of a disorderly house. Is that true or false?"

"It is utterly false."

"He has said that he first met you in a disorderly house in Twenty-sixth street."

"That is also false."

"In a house of prostitution," persisted Mr. Hinsdale.

"It is (here Mrs. Wyse's voice became husky and she hesitated for a moment) also false."

"Mr. Wyse has said that on one occasion you slapped him in the face."

"Mr. Wyse has said that on one occasion you slapped him in the face."

"It is talked disrespectfully to me and I tapped him lightly on the face."

"He said that you once scratched his face in San Francisco so that it was very sore."

"That is false," replied Mrs. Wyse.

"He has also said that he has repeatedly visited you since your separation, staying over night."

"False," replied Mrs. Wyse, briefly.

That ended her direct evidence, and Mr. Lamb began the cross-examination by asking:

"Was it Mr. Wyse's promise to give his $74,000 house to you that induced you to change your mind and return with him from Faris?"

"No, sir," said Mrs. Wyse, looking somewhat relieved at the question, "my strong love for my husband and his promise to reform awayed noe. There was a mortusage on the house, and its transfer was no inducement."

Mr. Lamb produced a copy of Mrs. Wyse's accounts at the Secord National Bank from 1881, to wing that during those years also had deposited $190,000, and that she has $1,000 there now. Mr. Lamb made it viain that it was saw until Mrs. Wyse had obtained from her

Mrs. Wyse straightened up and answered positively. "I did not."

In reply to Mr. Lamb's questions as to where she had lived previous to meeting Mr. Wyse, the witness said that she had lived part of the time in Buffalo and that she had lived in New York at the house of Jennie Warner at 23 West Twenty-third street. She might have lived for a short time in Lexington avenue, but she didn't remember it. She had visited friends at various places. various places.

Q.—Didn't you live for a time at 1,263 Broadway?

A.—Ob, yes: I lived there with a dressmaker who was poor and who was forced to rent as she testified? A.—I never saw the man in my life.

Q.—Did she sver live with you at 1.263 Broadway before you were married? A.—Yes.
Q.—Under what name was she known when you met her? A.—She was known as Nellie Rich. Here Mr. Wyse looked directly at his wife, who looked in another direction.
Mr. Hinsdale then tried his hand with the witness, and introduced the Cleveland letter which Mr. Wyse said that he had received.
"Look at that marriage notice, Mr. Wyse," said Mr. Hinsdale.
The notice had been clipped from a paper and was pasted at the head of the letter. It read:

MARRIED.

Gingras on Swan street, by the Rev. William Sheiton, D. D., W. S. Wise and Mrs. E. C. Hill, both of

New York city. No cards.

It was noticeable that Mr. Wyse's name was misspelled in this announcement; and after he had looked at it he said to Mr. Hinsdale: "I didn't publish that marriage notice; had nothing to do with it."

Q.—But when you married Mrs. Wyse you married her under the name of Mrs. E. C. Hill, did you not? A.—Yes. I did.

Then Mr. Wyse read the Cleveland letter, as follows:

SHEMINT'S OFFICE, DUFFALO, N. Y...

SHEMIFF'S OFFICE, DUFFALO, N. Y., Aug. 13, 1873. WILLIAM—I am amazed and dumfounded, but I congratulate you and from the bottom of my heart. A long life of perfect bliss and married contentment I hope may be yours. I go to find Blassel, with whom I shall drink the health of the newly married. Please present my compliments to the other side of the firm.

This ended the testimony in the case.

Mrs. Wyse's la syer made the statement after the court had adjourned that Mrs. Wyse had been perfectly willing to pay her husband $1.5 a week, but that he frequently demanded more, and annoyed her so that she finally decided to bring the thing to an issue by stooping his allowance and setting him sue for a settlement of the case in court. The evidence will be summed up next Friday before Judge Freedman.

STOLE A DUMMY.

Pollee Thought the Thief a Kidnapper Until They Captured the Figur While Policemen Dale and Maxon of the West Thirty-seventh street station were walking down Eighth avenue on Thursday evening they noticed a man, and what appeared to be a woman, looking into the lighted window of Abraham Machbor's dry goods store at Thirty-sixth street. Suddenly there arose on the air shrick after shrick. The two policemen then saw the man running down Eighth avenue at full speed with the woman under his arm. The pollcemen started after the kidnapper at full speed. The woman the kidnapper had under his arm had been jerked off her feet, and her long ulater was dragging along the sidewalk. Despite the burden which hampered him, the kidnapper held his own against his pursuers. Although he slipped and fell once, the woman falling full

"Why don't you plok her up, Phil? Is she dead?"
"Look yourself," was the response.
Then Maxon had his laugh. The supposed woman the two policemen had so heroically saved was a dummy, dressed up in a long coat and winter hat. The policemen took the dummy back to the dry goods store, where it had acted as an advertisement, and it was claimed by Mrs. Machbor, who had seen the man grab it, and it was from her lips that the shrieks had come. She also told the policemen that the dummy, all dressed up, was worth $13, so the prisoner was taken to the station house and locked up for petit larceny. He said he was John Curry, 40 years old, of 440 West Fortieth street. He was arraigned in the Jefferson Market Police Court yesterday morning, and Justice Taintor held him for trial in the General Sessions.

DESPERADO REID'S COURSE RUN.

His Mather Brings Home His Body from West Virginia, Where He Died Fighting. LOUISVILLE, Feb. 8.- Mrs. Nancy Reld has returned from West Virginia to Manchester, Clay county, with the remains of her son, Dale C. Reid, who died from the effects of a wound re-ceived in a fight, in which Reid shot and instantly killed Perry Elliston and fatally wounded John Lambert, a friend of Elliston. The death of Reid closes the chapter of one of the desperate men of Kentucky. Though only 30 years old, it is said Reid killed four men and badly wounded as many more. He was a fugitive from justice at the time of his death. One of Reid's first victims was a desperado who had compelled a mountain preacher to dance himself almost to death. Reid, who had witnessed the performance, saw that the evangelist was about to be overcome with heat and said that he thought the preacher had danced enough. The desperado turned on Reid and requested Reid to do as the preacher had done. Reid fired and instantly killed his man, and the preacher and Reid went on their ways.

The Pygmies. By A. DE QUATREFAGES, late Professor of Anthropology at the Museum of Natural History, Paris. Translated by Prof. FRED-ERICK STARR. With numerous Illustra-

This is the second volume in the Anthropological Series. The author has gathered the results of careful studies of the small black races of Africa, and shows what the pyrmics of antiquity really were. The peculiar intellectual, moral, and religious characteristics of these races are also described.

The Great Ice Age.

and Its Relation to the Antiquity of Man. By JAMES GEIKIE, LL. D., F. R. S., &c. Professor of Geology and Mineralogy in the University of Edinburgh. Third edition, largely rewritten. With Maps and Illustrations. 8vo. Cloth, $7.50. In this new edition the author has profited by the sources of information opened since the first appearance of his book. Nearly three-fourths of the volume have been entirely rewritten and the remainder revised and rearranged. He has valided the regions described and verified the reports of others, and he makes a special acknowledgment to recent American students of the Ice Age. The new edition offers a comprehensive survey of this fascinating subject brought down to date.

Separate Class Rooms for Truncts. The Committee on By-laws and Rules of the loard of Education was to have met yesterday afternoon, but, owing to the want of a quorum the meeting was postponed until next Friday. The committee is to consider a plan to set spart certain class romns for the use of habitual certain class rooms for the use of habitual truants, who are to be taught trades. An attempt is to be made to find some spare class rooms if possible. Under a recent resolution of the Board, there is to be an enumeration of the children next Monday, "or the first clear day thereafter," if Monday should be a bad day. The number of pupils on the rolls will be reported, and also those actually present and the number of yacant sests in each room, if any,

"ar. Crawford's new story, "Ine Raisfons, is as powerful a work as any that has come from his pen. " " Harmonised by a strength and warmth of imagination uncommon in modern fiction, the story will be heartily enjoyed by every one who reads it."—Edinburgh Scotsman. "Vastly interesting and readable. * * Of greater interest than the first installment, so that we recall it with a new admiration. The incidents have the dramatic quality. * * * They impress the reader as actual occurrences, and he feels that he is actually in the scene. What warmer praise than that could any now-elist have ?"-N. F. Times. "The adventures of 'Katharine Lauderdale' are continued in a way that is entrancingly entertaining.

* * * There is humor, pathos, grief, and passion in these two volumes, which the author has endowed with a living interest."—Boston Journal. "Mr. Crawford's pen portraits are wonderfully vivid. His analysis of motive is keen and subtle. His por-trayal of passion, be it love or avarice, is most graphic."—Bost. Advertiser.

Brief Seriews of Important and Interes Mr. Justin Huntley McCarthy has chosen as motto for his new story, "A Woman of Impulse" (G. P. Putnam's Sons), a sentiment from the letters of Pertinax: "Coincidence, coincidence, divine coincidence! Let us at least cling to it in legend if we lack it plentifully in life. Let us remember that if romance is a mirror it is sometimes a magic mirror, and the sights that we see therein are governed, not by the weary laws of a workeday world, but by the wonders of an Arabian tale." This is contrary to the teaching of Mr. Howells, and also to that of Prof. Boyesen, though Mr. Boyesen in practice departs from his precept in a most amazing manner; but it is not probable that there will be any extravagant or widely sseminated worry on that account. The motto explains perfectly the idea and the character of Mr. McCarthy's story. It is frankly romantic. The serious logicians among novel readers, those who insist upon entire reasonableness in their fiction, should pass it by doubtiess in order to avoid unnecessary irritation; but to the lighter-minded, the many who read tales for the mere amusement that may be found in them, it seems to be a story to be recommended. It opens interestingly, from the human and unconscientious point of view. The young archeological scholar, in his yellow tweed suit, pursuing respectfully the beautiful girl student along the Greeco-Roman galleries and through the Assyrian and other rooms of the British Museum, is an interesting figure engaged in an interesting occu-pation; and the evolution of the conditions established in the first chapter will be satisfac-tory, we have no doubt, to all lovers of outspoken romance. For our part, we have found plenty of lively entertainment in the story. The striking up of an acquaint-anceship between the lovely girl student and the scholarly and athletic young fellow in tweeds; the incident of the lost vio-lets and brooch, with its exciting pugilistic accompaniment; the stop-thief incident, with its vivid description of the hero's foot race through the streets of London; the Hindu snake charmer fer to the probabilities here and there; but we do wish that in the wrestle between these two the man in tweeds had come out on top. Mesers. Stone & Kimball of Chicago publish four of the Maeterlinck plays, "Princess Maleine," "The Intruder," "The Blind," and "The Seven Princesses," in a translation by Mr. Richard Hovey. In an introduction Mr. Hovey says of the distinguished symbolist: "He walks continuously on the dangerous border between the tragic and the ridiculous, and it would be strange, indeed, if he never made a misstep; but in the main it must be confessed that he has a cool head and a sure footing. He has been ac cused of a lack of humor, but it is rather a restriction to one kind of humor-the hysalways terror-terror, too, of one type-that of the churchyard. If other emotions are presented, they are transposed into this key. He is a poet of the sepulchre, like Poe—as masterly in his own method as Poe was in his, and destined, perhaps, to exert the same wide influence. His devotion to the wormy side of things may prevent him from ever becoming popular; yet Poe's slipped and fell once, the woman falling full length upon the snow-covered sidewalk, he jumped to his feet in an instant and stooping down grabbed her around the waist and again started off at full speed.

He had lost considerable distance though, and the two policemen gained on him. Dale, getting winded, pulled out his revolver and yelled to the fleeing man to stoop rhe would shoot. The cuan turned his head around, and, seeing the glistening revolver, lifted his victim clear from the ground and with a swing pitched her in a snow drift into the street. He then made off at full speed.

drift into the street. He then made off at full speed.

When the two policemen came up it was quickly decided that Dale should look after the woman, while Mason followed the kidnapper. When Dale went to the assistance of the woman she lay full length upon the snow, face downward. The policeman gently stooped over the figure and raised it.

Then he gave one look at it, and the next instant began laughing so heartily that he lost his feet and sat down on the sidewalk. The tears were running down his cheeks when Maxon came back leading the supposed kidnapper, who he had made come to a hait under threat of being ahot. The first question asked by Maxon was:

"Why don't you pick her up, Phil? Is she dead?"
